

Gage Optometry adds to team

Written by Jesse Trimble

Wednesday, 24 March 2010 08:00

Someone new will be checking out your eyes if you visit Gage Optometry in Louisburg or Paola.

Dr. Angela MacDonald joined Dr. George Gage's staff last week and will be servicing children's eye care, fitting contact lenses and performing comprehensive eye health examinations, according to a news release.

She attended the University of Missouri-St.Louis Optometry School in St. Louis, where she received a Doctor of Optometry degree.

MacDonald grew up in the Kansas City area and said she always wanted to move back after college. She originally became interested in optometry after a family emergency, when her sister had a swollen nerve behind her eye. Doctors had to make sure the swelling wasn't caused by a brain tumor.

"I wanted to find a field where I could participate in the community and make a positive impact," MacDonald said.

"I am looking forward to practicing with my new associate," Gage said in the release. "Having an additional optometrist join me in Paola and Louisburg will allow the practice to add more evening and Saturday appointments, as well as the latest technology and treatment options to our already comprehensive eye care."

MacDonald said she'll practice mostly out of the Paola office, but will be in Louisburg every other Saturday.

The offices are at 14 E. Peoria St. in Paola and at 8 S. Broadway St. in Louisburg.